Thinking Beyond Behaviour

Behaviour management from the inside out

Essential learning for teachers who want to think and understand beyond the behavioural paradigm

- How understanding the emotional world of children affects understanding of behaviour
Participants will consider emotional development of children and strategies for facilitating occupational performance in educational settings
- How understanding sensory functioning helps us to understand behaviour
Consider differing sensory processing profiles and the implications upon children's participation in educational settings. Participants will develop approaches for supporting children's differing sensory needs
- How understanding the emotional world of parents helps us understand behaviour
Consider issues such as separation anxiety and approaches for educators in supporting both parents and children
- Applying this understanding within a sensory attachment framework
Including practical, hands-on strategies for supporting children and their families within early education settings

Presenter Sarah Broderick is an occupational therapist whose focus is on the holistic needs of children and their families. Her occupational therapy skills are unique as she has training addressing the developmental and social emotional needs of children. The psychosocial aspect of her practice involves working closely with parents to better understand their child's behaviour and think about supporting them when their child's behaviours are not in line with the best needs for their child's development. She participates regularly in professional development, through mentoring, informal research and courses related to resilience, sensory attachment intervention, sensory processing, child and family therapy and other relationship based interventions addressing social emotional needs of children and their families.
